? Occupational opportunities

? Travel Training

? Skills development and training courses

? Short Term Work Based Programmes

? New Developments – ‘call offs’

At the point of entry there would be a focus on what people want to achieve (outcomes) and help for them to achieve their personal aspirations. The enablement phase could be time limited could or intensive support programme in respect of employment-based skills, or a longer supported employment offer and would focus on developing or regaining skills; accessing training, promoting independence, and helping people to connect to their communities, engage in education, voluntary or paid work. This phase would be suitable for service users with short term support needs.

This will require careful planning and collaboration between people using services to share support and achieve good value. Examples of this type of arrangement include:

- a few people attending mainstream classes such as adult learning lessons supported by one worker
- setting up short courses in existing community facilities on work-based skills
- Offering a series of open events, workshops or taster sessions for people.
- Running Summer Clubs
