TfL owns around 5,700 acres of land across the Capital including buildings, land attached to Tube stations, railways and highways, making us one of London's largest landowners. These sites provide an opportunity to generate revenue while helping us to support the growth of jobs and housing in London. TfL also work with adjoining landowners. The achievement of the Property Development, Planning and Design Team to deliver development of a significant number of sites will be underpinned by external town planning consultancy support when required. In most cases, the town planning work will seek to optimise housing delivery and good placemaking, and ultimately maximise development returns on the selected sites, in order to release revenue to support the development of transport schemes in London.
