The Supported Housing Commissioning Team acknowledges that increasingly, the clients who are accessing our services are presenting with more complex needs. In order to address this issue, the Supported Housing Commissioning Team has come up with a new service model to be able tender in the near future. We would like to explore with the service providers how this modelled service would look and approximately how much this will cost.

This new service model should be based on a strengths-based, psychologically informed environment, trauma-informed and co-produced approach, which will deliver the aspirations of its clients, enabling them to achieve their potential for independent living through a time of continued change which will bring with it challenges and opportunities. The support hours are allocated to clients flexibly depending upon their support needs. The Supported Housing Commissioning Team would like to call this – the supportive relational model TM.

We would like to approach the market to explore this model and how would you would meet the specifications and aspirations described by completing a questionnaire and a value for money workbook to give an indicative costing for such model service.
