II.1.4) Short description

At a high level, the requirements can be split into two primary themes:

- Helping to address the behavioural challenges of young people and families in difficulty; and
- Intensive support provision for young people on the edges of care.

The work that will be undertaken within these themes should support our young people to remain safely within, or return to, their own community and minimise the number of young people who require statutory support interventions. The approaches should be strongly evidence based and taken forward in partnership with other agencies such as Social Work, Health, Education and Police. Risk assessment and management should be central to all working practices and all plans for support to young people should be based on a well-developed collaborative assessment process.

II.2.4) Description of the procurement

Helping to address the behavioural challenges of young people and families in difficulty.

- Aims to cover a range of needs for children and young people from low to high concern, some interventions here will simply be about wellbeing and need whereas others are more likely to be about high level concern and risk.
- Some of the behavioural matters will be focussed on, and a consequence of a child's experience of, trauma and/or adversity and it is therefore expected that providers will have staff conversant with and able to deliver service in a trauma-informed/responsive way.
- The primary principles we would expect this aspect of the service to work to is that all behaviour is communication.

II.2.4) Description of the procurement

Intensive support provision for young people on the edges of care.

- The key aim of the service is to provide better outcomes for young people and families by supporting improvements in a child's life across a number of areas, depending on the needs of the young people and their families.

- The service will focus on families with children aged 0 - 18 years old. It will help ensure children will be supported to remain at home and with their families where possible and engage with parents and carers to improve their capacity to care for their children, provide practical parenting skills and help build their ability to engage positively with their community.

- The service will be flexible in its intensity and will encourage the building of family routines and improve parental confidence and responsibility.
