Section VI. Complementary information

VI.3) Additional information

In order to deliver these examinations, the British Council requires a large number of non-permanent staff to act as invigilators. Invigilators may be required to work in venues where the exams are delivered to test takers who travel to those venues to sit the exam, or virtually via computer sitting in a remote proctoring hub. Key Areas: Recruitment: The British Council requires a provider to recruit suitable non-permanent staff to invigilate examinations. We have five different categories of non-permanent staff that we use to invigilate exams: •Supervisors •Assistant Supervisors •Invigilators •Marshals •IT Technicians On-boarding: Once recruited, non-permanent staff will need to be trained before they can be deployed to invigilate examinations and other temporary position . This training ranges from generic training that all such staff need to have such as Child Protection, to product-specific training The British Council would require a provider to ensure that these courses were completed before the staff commence their duties. The provider would also be required to carry out pre-employment screening on any staff recruited, such as criminal record checks. Contracting:- The British Council would require a provider to legally contract and pay non-permanent staff in each of the countries in our region. The provider would be responsible for ensuring that all staff contracted had the legal right to work in the countries of deployment and had all necessary documentation such as visas etc. The preferred method of payment would be on an hourly basis for actual number of hours worked if possible in the country of operation. Labour Law and Visa Compliance :- The provider would be responsible for ensuring that any staff deployed were in possession of all the necessary permissions to work in the country of deployment and compliant with local labour law.* MARKET ENGAGEMENT EXERCISE The purpose of this exercise is to inform the British Council of the market's capability and expertise in delivering suitable services. Completion of the exercise is not a prerequisite to completing any forthcoming tender.
