Description

The Strategic Technology and Innovation Management (STIM) consortium is a practice-oriented research and networking collaboration between industrial partners and the Centre for Technology Management which is part of the Institute for Manufacturing (IfM) at the University of Cambridge. It delivers a combination of practical and academic outputs relevant to the management of technical innovation funded through financial contributions from industrial members. Summaries of the research are presented at regular member events, relevant academic conferences and in relevant academic journals. An end of year summary of research is provided and the outputs shared with the NDA group.
