The contract is to deliver Specialist services for severe personality disorder in adults – in London

The Portman Clinic delivers a specialist forensic mental health outpatient service for service users of all ages (children, adolescents and adults) whose conditions lead them to have or fear having antisocial or deviant impulses and/or behaviour.

The Portman Clinic predominantly uses a psychodynamic approach which seeks to treat Service Users by tackling the causes of their condition, improving the symptoms (including their behaviour) in a sustainable manner, rather than just containing and restraining the Service Users. It also supports other services and professionals by providing consultative functions to mental health and social care professionals directly involved with the Service Users. The key aim is to help Service Users to reduce their need to act on their impulses (offend) by helping them understand their emotional states and thus giving them deep-seated psychic resources to find alternative, less destructive and harmful, ways of behaving towards themselves and others.
