Scope

Description

The objective of this feasibility study is to assess the technical, environmental, and economic viability of implementing a Ground Source Heat Pump (GSHP) system at Buckingham Palace. The study will evaluate site-specific conditions, including geological and hydrological suitability, energy demand profiles, and potential system configurations. It aims to determine whether a GSHP solution can deliver sustainable, low-carbon heating and cooling in alignment with our operational goals and environmental commitments. The outcome will inform decision-making regarding future investment, design, and implementation strategies.
