A digital maturity assessment enables health and social care organisations to evaluate how effectively they use digital technologies to deliver, manage, and improve services. It assesses leadership, infrastructure, data use, innovation, staff confidence, digital skills, and readiness for change. It also considers digital inclusion, ensuring services are accessible and equitable for all.

The successful service provider will be required to:

- Develop a robust, user-friendly digital maturity assessment platform tailored to the Scottish health and social care context.
- Enable benchmarking at local, regional, and national levels.
- Provide actionable insights to inform digital transformation planning and investment.
- Design and host a complementary learning and development website offering curated resources, bespoke analysis, discussion groups, and improvement guides aligned with assessment outcomes.
- Ensure accessibility, data security, and ongoing technical support.

This work will play a critical role in supporting continuous improvement, workforce development, and strategic alignment across Scotland's health and social care landscape.
